When Apple does this it's very easy to forgive a few glitches, but when the quirks are impossible to make work - the software just stops working - that takes no effort, no talent and no practice to fix. So, yes, I'm in two minds. I'm seriously considering going back to Mac OS X because the upgrade I have to get is a much better spec for the price, but I'm no sure what functionality to expect with my new machine. I'm also very worried about the headaches. Personally, I'm fed up with the constant upgrading, the irritants that build up and I'm just not too keen on the company behind them all. So I'm looking at getting an Acer Aspire One for the next version of OS X. I use the Mac for everything except Photoshop and FrontPage/DreamWeaver... The main reason I bought a Mac was that I was offered tax-free expenses from my company (lots more was saved on the tax bill) to buy a Mac - an amount that I couldn't get with Windows... so that was the primary point of purchase for me. I had Windows, but found I didn't really like it and switched to OS X on a MacBook that I bought in December. I can't stand the constant upgrading of the OS. Each new update comes with problems - particularly with Adobe products. The last version I had to junk because I was experiencing a non-working web browser with no way of fixing it and constant problems with Photoshop CS4 (I had CS2 before that). Just about everything I tried to use either didn't work at all or didn't work for long enough to get it working. I found it impossible to use my Mac without Adobe products in a good way. I finally decided to pull the plug because it was taking so much time and effort and I

Farting gets a new phase: from an idiosyncratic habit to a common symptom of disease. Farting is a common human behavior with no clear physiological correlate. Recent work suggests that people with bronchoconstriction or abdominal pain might produce a special rhythm while doing so, making them identifiable by police or medical personnel. Variation in the rhythm among different people is one source of the giggle-inducing potential of the behavior. I suggest that there is a far greater variability in the rhythms of people who have disease than has been hitherto appreciated, with the result that detection of rhythmic differences between groups of people with disease might lead to early diagnosis of the diseases concerned.Jagged Alliance 3: Back in Action Come back to the tactical espionage action of the Jagged Alliance series with Jagged Alliance 3: Back in Action – a remake of Jagged Alliance 2, that lets you relive the tense conflicts of the original Jagged Alliance: Flashback series. Play as the original character that you played in the previous series – or as a new character – or change everything up and take command of the capital city of Rico Rodriguez to lead your faction.Q: Java: How do I trim characters off the beginning of a string so that it's shorter than a certain amount? I need to remove leading spaces from the beginning of each line in a text file. If the leading space is shorter than five characters, I need it to remove only the first five characters and leave the rest alone. For example, if my input is: hello there world My output should be: hello there world How can I do this? A: Here's a simple solution that relies on the StringReader/StringWriter streams to work around your problem. If anyone has a better solution, I'd love to see it. String input="hello 3e33713323
