The above response is the output of the command. As you can see the i used options --del-keyword=1 and --del-keyword=1. But this does not return the desired output. My goal is to find the product key. Note that the products has 7 different x64Bit versions and each version has different product key. How can i use grep in this way so that only the product key is displayed. A: You can capture data before and after the keyword you are looking for: `grep -oP 'keyword =.*?(?=. retail)' file.txt` Basically all the commas captured (and the equals sign itself) before and after the keyword, but before and after the string that you need to match. The -oP makes it print out the entire line, so you can use grep's built-in text processing feature to re-assemble it into a form you can easily post-process. If that isn't working for you, you can use Perl instead: `perl -n -e 'print if /keyword =.?(?=. *retail)/g' file.txt`
