What's new:

is an open-source satire platform – a web series which poke fun at zombie fiction. In our first episode, we take a look at the game Grand Theft Auto V, and question the foundations of this popular entertainment franchise. Previous episodes can be found at: and During the recent premiere of Major League Gaming in New York, eSports fans and the general public alike took note of the shining presence of the gaming superstar David "Shebib" Shebib. Between hosting events like Halo 3 Championship Series and a multitude of other prominent shows, Shebib plays a very important part in the booming eSports scene. Where once Gametag.TV was thought of mostly as a one-dimensional portal for the masses to consume gaming content, it has now evolved into a streaming portal that can hold gaming content for the masses. And Shebib plays an important role in the current gaming industry landscape. Gameinformer recently showcased Shebib's impact on gaming media coverage, describing how "Often times Shebib's voice will become the de-facto voice of a game and fan community." It's hard to completely disregard the role of Shebib in this narrative, as it would create a glaring narrative dissonance if a gaming personality were part of the mainstream media, but not the gaming community. And as popular as he is for both the gaming media, and the gaming community in general, fans, media watchers, and gaming enthusiasts alike are kept unaware of the wider industry that Shebib has a role in. If it weren't for his appearances on shows like GIBC, Planet of the Gamers, PCGamesN, and PCWeek, there would be no mention of his important involvement in the gaming industry as a whole. So, although Shebib is an integral part of this booming universe, nobody seems to be talking about it: the platform has been given prominence without acknowledging what Shebib does for them.This brief inspiration piece attempts to deconstruct the narratives surrounding Shebib in the gaming industry, and unravel the web of lies that bind them together. But is this an effective depiction of Shebib? Was it necessary to portray Shebib in such a negatively charged manner in order to discredit him in the eyes of the gaming public? Through an analysis of Shebib's influence on many high-profile figures in the industry

Edit #2: I'm a bit out of practice with this forum. The letter I use as punctuation was the actual "laugh" button. And yes, it is deliberate. It's a reference to a Seinfeld episode where Jerry is asked about his dating life and he proceeds to say, "I'm good with the laughing, thank you very much. Some people I can't laugh. Wait... Comment I liked the first 20 minute but then i just got bored. To me, it was a bit boring considering there was no blood and when you die, it just ends. There was no real "scene" leading up to the player getting assaulted or shot by the baddie.
