You can get all there is to know about the..Tuesday, May 27, 2014 I'm late but better late than never, It seems I've been around awhile now, though not officially for a couple of years. I have been around with my other blogging site Heavy Metal Body Art, run by the wife and started doing reviews for last winter. That site is now in hibernation. So I'm back... I guess. For my first review here I'll be discussing a song I heard a few weeks ago; Avènement Du Furet (Loudon Wainwright III). I'll play the song for ya and then tell ya what I think of it all. I will only be doing album reviews for this first post. the song is played but I don't feel like a whole lot of the words... Tried to find the song but it's called Avènement Du Furet. i enjoyed this song but i think it probably means a little bit more than the description provided I'm almost through the album and there's still a few more reviews I want to do. It's only 3 songs but the remainder of the album is pretty bad, but that's ok. I just hope the band can pull it together and have a rerecovery. Sunday, May 18, 2014 All good things shall pass. French electronic producer TiMplar has been putting out music for over 13 years now and finally has an album out. TiMplar continues to prove that patience really is a virtue. This release is a Gacha on the dance floor. Time shall be the hand that brings all good things to you. There is a positive representation of Earth with it's red, orange, and yellow light. Green and blue light will be our friends but only just barely in some places. The artwork is water colored to give off the illusion of something in the process of becoming. TiMplar has a set of his own synth patterns called Nuits Latente, which gives a strong dystopian representation of something that's about to go haywire. Now we will have to go to a techno mood land where the isolation and loneliness of our own
