I created MyCustomCache class and I implemented all required methods (get, put, remove etc). Now I want to set the MyCustomCache as my caching for current session. My problem is that I didn't use singleton for my Spring bean. My spring bean has the following configuration: @Bean(name = "cache") public Cache cache() { return CacheBuilder.newBuilder().build(); } MyCustomCache class looks like: public class MyCustomCache implements Cache { private Map cacheMap; @Override public Object get(String cacheKey) { Map map = cacheMap.get(cacheKey); if (map!= null) { return map.get(cacheKey); } else { return null; } } @Override public void put(String cacheKey, Object cacheValue) { cacheMap.put(cacheKey, cacheValue); } @Override public void remove(String cacheKey) { cacheMap.remove(cacheKey); } } The caching works fine when I use the default cache implementation, but when I use my own cache bean, Spring creates threadsafe cache. Is there any option to configure my MyCustomCache bean without using singleton or same logic as I used in my default cache implementation. Thanks in advance. A: If you have an interceptor implementation which could be used, like adding logging, then you could reuse it. Then look up the cache by calling the
