Persistent unfolded protein response (UPR) activation has been implicated in the pathogenesis of many human diseases, including liver diseases. Failure to overcome the UPR may lead to the formation of reactive oxygen species (ROS), which in turn has been implicated in both the initiation and propagation of autophagy. Here, we have investigated the role of UPR and autophagy in hepatocyte cytotoxicity. We find that autophagy is activated by ER stress in both apoptosis-proficient and -deficient cells, whereas UPR was activated by apoptotic or cytotoxic ER stress in apoptosis-proficient cells, but this was not found in apoptosis-deficient cells. The induction of autophagy in response to UPR activation was not required for the initiation of apoptosis, although inhibition of the unfolded protein response increased apoptosis in response to staurosporine. Furthermore, we demonstrate that UPR-induced autophagy was, in contrast to apoptosis, not antagonized by caspase-inhibition, indicating that UPR-induced autophagy occurs downstream of apoptotic caspase-activation, despite being dependent on the same sensor proteins. We also find that UPR-induced autophagy was induced by ER-stressors of different mechanisms of action. Most importantly, we demonstrate that the activation of autophagy by UPR results in increased ER retention and activation of the unfolded protein response. Taken together, these results suggest that the UPR is an important point of intersection for autophagy and the apoptosis response.
