i have the same problem as many of you, i uninstalled steam today when it downloaded nothing. when i try to play, it launches a black screen or window with the error "the steam client is still in beta!" and i can't play anything. please help. 4. you are trying to work with a new engine that maya doesnt natively support now you know why this error is so seldom seen! this one is actually fairly easy to solve. you will need to use the native python engine support for the engine you are using. if youre using blender, look in the python api folder for a file named engine.py this file is a wrapper for the native blenders python api. if youre using mel, then look for the engine_blender.py file. once you open this file and find the class for the engine you want to work with, then create a new module for it within maya. from there, you can import the engine class and use it within the module like you would any other maya class. there is nothing wrong with this process, as long as you understand that you are creating a new module rather than using a separate old module. 5. theres a problem with your setup.ini file this error may occur if you are modifying the setup.ini file while you are testing or if you have installed an antivirus program that prevents maya from reading the file. open up your setup.ini file and make sure that it is all one line (see below). if there is any spaces in the setup.ini file they will simply be ignored and the file will work fine. 6. It's just getting darker and darker we've all had this frustrating problem before, especially as we get older. if you're still having a problem, it is likely that something is wrong in your setup file. try reinstalling maya completely from scratch and then return to this section for errors. 7. you are using version 8.5 of maya maya 8.5 uses an even newer version of the c/c++ engine, and this upgrade results in a rather dramatic drop in native support for the scripting engine. this has an important implication: maya 8.5 and up will no longer work with python 2.3, and will continue to work with python 2.4. to make this work again, download the old version of maya again and install it. if you are using blender, then you can simply download the 2.4a version. if you are using maya mel, then you will need to download the 2.3.2a version from the official website. the key thing here is to ensure you have maya 8.5 installed on your machine before you start the installer. this includes everything that came with the installer (so you may not have everything it came with).
