After you have your version of Photoshop installed, the next step is to crack the software. This is done by locating the patch file and downloading it. Once you have the patch file, you will need to unzip it, and then run the patching process. This is the part of the process where you need to know what you're doing, and it can be a bit risky. If you're not careful, you can accidentally corrupt your operating system, or you can mess up your computer's registry. If you're not careful, you can end up with a virus or spyware, so be careful. Once the patching process is complete, you will have an activated version of your software.

<http://www.instagram.com/p/B7f3soLvyRed/?thread=4&t=> If you're not pleased by a program change, then that's a real defeat. Adobe wants to say "You have a smaller preview now because we shrunk it. Open your eyes: the smaller preview was available in an earlier version of Photoshop, and then we changed the look of that version." If you have a smaller preview and a smaller preview and another smaller preview until you have no preview at all, then how can you know the real deal is even smaller? I'd actually hoped they might have done something about that. My 7 1/2 inch monitor didn't hold a 1/4 to 1/3 overview at all sizes, but they still kept it. I hated that. If you don't want to share that picture with anyone that will bother to look at it, you're still not sharing it: that's the beauty of an electronic portfolio. If you get a bigger monitor at some point, I'd give that a try. That way you'd have a 24" monitor and could zoom all the way in and out with no problem. I'm afraid that might be the only really good workaround to this Adobe and Apple snafu. Adobe is the most innovative company in photography, and I expect it to stay that way. That's why I'm paying to use Adobe software. Yes, Adobe is a little ham-handed now in trying to force us to use the stunning new iPad Pro as a replacement for their SLR. But as one of the world's most innovative brands, perhaps Adobe should learn its lesson. If you use a full focal-plane shutter like the Nikon D810, you're really just out of luck. However, if you use a mirror shutter like my Nikon D3s, off-loading the image with an SD card is trivial. The Nikon D3s camera will also display its exposure metering information and other metering data in the viewfinder, which is handy. You also have the option to change specific color settings in the camera. Ideally, I would like to see more of that type of stuff displayed in the iPad photo app. A second SD card slot and more SD card options would also be welcome.
