Q: Signal Processing Audio Processing using python I am trying to implement Audio Stereo Matching for my audio system using python. I have done some code in C using ALSA

API but the complexity of it makes it too computationally expensive. I was looking for an easy way to implement it using python with a pre compiled library. It is for a small scale project and I don't need portability for it. I did not find any open source libraries that can help. I need a pre-built library (or libs) so that I don't have to reinvent the wheel every time. A: I do not know if the problem has an easy solution, but if I understand correctly you want to match one AudioStream (PCM) against another. You can do that using the ffmpeg library, since it has an Audio Stream class. So you can fetch the first audio and then create a new audio of the same size with the same samples, but reversed. Then you can feed
